

NEVADA'S FALSE ECONOMY.

Engineer Rosewater of Omaha tells how that city in four years advanced from a population of 32,000 to 64,000 and in six years to 100,000. It was by running in debt. This may seem a little strange at first glance but it is true. Omaha year after year existed and expended as little as possible during the past seven years; but there was no real progress. In the meantime Kansas City was booming ahead, so was Minneapolis; so was all the country around, but Omaha felt no thrill. For years the citizens had been divided on the matter of street improvements, and the horror of running in debt held everything at a standstill. But in 1881 a measure was carried for beginning improvements. A sewer was put down in one street or one system of streets and good pavements and sidewalks were laid down after the street was properly graded. The city paid for the sewers and for paving the intersections of the streets, while to property owners the cost of paving and grading was assessed according to the front footage that each owned, and this amount was payable in ten yearly bonds, the bonds being a lien upon the realty until paid. The result was that property so improved double in value within a year regardless of the lien against it; in more than half the cases the original owners sold out before they had to pay the first bond, and suddenly it was found that the best way to get rich sometimes was to run into debt. But something else was discovered. The improvements gave 3000 working men employment to supply whom, there had to be a great deal more business done. Three thousand working men mean everywhere in the East 15,000 people. It was found that half as many people again had to have food and clothing in Omaha. The 3,000 men have been at work ever since, when the weather permitted, and as such examples are contagious, as people like to stop and join the band where everybody seems busy people began to stop at Omaha and it began to be said, "Omaha has a boom." Now the city is in debt $350,000, private citizens have liens upon their property for probably as much more for street improvements but the city has increased five fold in assessed valuation and is equipped now for indefinite expansion in the future.

The town of Carson has been economizing for some years, and so has the State of Nevada. It is a well-known fact in finance that you can't make money by holding on to it. The narrow-minded economy and reform idiots in this State have kept it down by wanting everybody to be as close-fisted as themselves. Whenever a bill is before the Legislature calling for public improvements and expending some of the hoarded gold of the State, the State officers are hovering round and cautioning the members against "incurring any unnecessary expense." They frighten the members by their long faces, and bills are defeated which would help boom Nevada.

We will not mention names, for whenever we do we hear complaints that we are "prejudiced" and "unfair." If this thing is kept up many years longer Nevada will be buried, and the inscription on its tombstone will be "Killed by Economy."

The Post is showing its mud-headed contemporaries that the word "copyrighted" over the dispatches is not only a sham as hollow as a pig's bladder, but a violation of the copyright law subjecting the publishers to fine and imprisonment. The repugnance of the Post for shams and humbugs endears it to the minds of all lovers of good hard sense.

Madam Modjeska says that all she thinks of now is to make money enough to allow her to retire to her California ranch. She should not stop very soon. Perhaps Modjeska does not realize how much money it takes to enable an amateur to run a ranch.

The men charged with robbing the Postoffice at Palisade were arraigned yesterday. They will be tried on the 27th.
